Authentic Shanghai & Japanese Cuisine

Here's what some critics have said of our Shanghai Tang restaurant at 13-20 40th Road in Flushing, NY: EATING OUT "Like most Shanghai-style restaurants, Shanghai Tang serves terrific soup dumplings, for which Americans seem to have a special affinity." NEW YORK TIMES, APRIL 16, 1999

THE TASTE OF COOL "... Shanghai Tang has a lot more to offer, including an excellent selection of cold dishes like 'wined crab' Shanghai pan-fried noodles and any of a half-dozen ed preparations." NEW YORK TIMES, JULY 24, 1999

"In the always friendly confines of Shanghai Tang, a visitor can sample a variety of unconventional dishes. Among these are eels, and the scented blue-crab."

Shanghai Tide
in SoHo

NEW YORK TIMES, APRIL 16, 1999
THE TASTE OF COOL... Shanghai Tide has a lot more to offer. Including an excellent selection of cold dishes like wine-drenched crabs, Shanghai pan-fried noodles and any of a half-dozen eel preparations.*

NEW YORK TIMES, JULY 24, 1998
 "In the always friendly confines of Shanghai Tide, a visitor can sample a variety of unconventional dishes. Among these are blue, and the sauteed blue-crab special."
GO, ALAN RICHMAN
 "Where you also find a massive menu of dishes not offered at your local takeout."

Among the cuisine of the four dominant regions in China, namely, Eastern Shanghai, Western Sichuan, Northern Peking and Southern Canton, best known for its diversity and strikingly distinctive flavor, is the Sichuan Cuisine. By being the late Chairman Mao's favorite cuisine, its popularity became widespread with many state banquets held in the Sichuan tradition. Our restaurant specializes in this original style of Sichuan Cuisine.

The important of exclusive spices and many other essential cooking ingredients, such as brown peppercorn oil and Sichuan bean sprouts are necessary for our kitchen to create authentic presentations. In hopes of creating this striking flavor, many non-importers add extra or trivial spices to their dishes, thus, leading the public into the misconception that all Sichuan Cuisine is spicy.

Do give us a try and be pleasantly surprised in rediscovering the Sichuan Cuisine.

soymilk vs cowmilk

Let's compare 100-gram portions (3.5 ounces) of soymilk vs. cow's milk.

Cow's milk has 61 calories. Soymilk has 33 calories.

Cow's milk contains 3.34 grams of fat.

Soymilk contains 1.41 grams of fat.

Cow's milk has 14 milligrams of cholesterol and no dietary fiber.

Soymilk contains 1.3 grams of fiber and has zero cholesterol.

Cow's milk contains a full range of amino acids.

Soymilk also contains a full range of amino acids.

Both contain plenty of protein.

Cow's milk actually has one not gram more protein than the 100-gram portion of soymilk.

Soymilk contains greater amounts of certain amino acids including arginine, aspartic, aspartic acid, and glutine.

Arginine slows the growth of cancers by strengthening the immune system.

Aspartic acid is the metabolism of sugars.

Aspartic acid increases thermogenesis and plays a vital role in metabolism, acting as an antioxidant.

Glycine is necessary for brain and nervous system functioning and musculoskeletal metabolism.

When milk is pasteurized, vitamins A, C, and D are destroyed.

The same can be said for those vitamins when soymilk is manufactured.

Soymilk does contain more than four times the amount of thiamine (vitamin B-1).

and nearly twice the amount of niacin (vitamin B-3) as does cow's milk.

Soymilk also contains more magnesium, copper, and manganese than does cow's milk.

Copper also aids in bone formation.

One early sign of osteoporosis is a deficiency in copper.

Soymilk contains twelve times the amount of copper as does cow's milk.

Soymilk also contains 42 times the amount of manganese as does cow's milk.

Manganese is also needed for bone formation.

People with anemia rely upon manganese for iron storage.

Small amounts of manganese are essential for nerve transmissions, protein metabolism, and many other body functions.

Lanzhou Hand-pulled noodles, also known as beef noodles, originated from city of Lanzhou, the source of Huanghe river, western plateau of China. It is said that they were sold in the streets of Lanzhou as early as Han dynasty and Qing dynasty. The beef noodles then was called hot pot. During the period of Qing in Qing dynasty, there was a Muslim named Ma Bao Zhai who started to research on beef noodles and further made improvements on it. It has now become the light beef noodle soup. By the 1950s of last century, Lanzhou beef noodle soup has been sold all over China as well as every nation of Southwest Asia. The worldwide customers highly praised the distinctness of Lanzhou beef noodles.

Three or four characteristics of genuine Lanzhou Hand pulled noodles:

- 1) Clear means that soup should be clear
- 2) White means that flour must be white with tendon
- 3) Red means that hot chili oil must be red
- 4) Green means that parsley, garlic both must be fresh and green

Beef noodles vary in their sizes. They are commonly seen as wide, under thin, thinner as well as the side of chive leaf. The distinctness of the Lanzhou Hand pulled noodles is that it is cooked using beef, beef bones together with more than 20 different natural seasoning. It tastes deliciously without feeling greasy. The ancients said "Four benefits hearts, beef benefits body". The Lanzhou Hand-pulled Noodles together with Xian Lamb soup, Suanzi knife-sliced noodles and Tianjin Gaozhuang are called the four most favorite food of China, and has been made known nationwide. Cattle eat variety of grasses and conquer hundreds of diseases. Today's science indicates that beef bone aids calcium to human body. Eating beef and lamb in winter can dispel cold, keep warm, and nourishes one's health in winter. We guarantee that our customers will have a genuine beef noodle soup in our restaurant.
